

Remarks by a Colleague and Friend

Herbert Franke

München

It seems to me that the Hellmut Wilhelm Symposium held at the University of Washington on October 26, 1990 to commemorate the passing away of this great scholar and unique personality should also include a word of tribute from one of his many friends overseas. We all know how Hellmut's life has been conditioned by his internationality – he was born in China, educated in Germany and has taught in America. His appointment to a chair in the University of Washington under George Taylor who established what became known as the Far Eastern and Russian Institute was a most fortunate decision because it has added to the multinational faculty of the Institute a person of wide accomplishments. Hellmut was a sinologue, that is, a scholar who refused to be isolated by the barriers between the so-called disciplines and who in his teaching and his publications viewed the civilization of China as a whole. He was familiar with the history, literature and, above all, philosophy of China and felt particularly attracted by the more arcane profundities of Chinese metaphysical thought. A lifelong interest in the Book of Changes characterized this side of his personality which we can perhaps trace back to his Suebian ancestry, an intellectual heritage from that German region which in the past has produced so many outstanding thinkers.

Above all he was a devoted teacher and it was a moving experience for his friends to notice how his former students continued to feel a deep personal attachment long after their graduation. The reason was certainly that Hellmut's courses were never restricted to teaching scholarly technicalities but that he considered teaching in a true humanistic spirit as nurturing a personal relation between individuals who jointly pursued the aim of understanding better a rich and fascinating civilization. In his later years he became more and more a recluse; he remained, however, mentally alert and let his visitors share the treasure of his spiritual experiences accumulated in a long and eventful life. So he became a sage, not unlike those Chinese hermits to whom people turned from everywhere for counsel and wisdom. We shall miss him, his scholarship, his friendly charm and quiet humor. He will not be forgotten by all those who had the privilege of knowing him and becoming his friends.
